1 Discuss whether government surveillance programs do more harm than good. Are they a violation of civil liberties?

Yes, these types of programs do more harm than good. To some extent government surveilling is acceptable but interfering in the common people's lives on every matter is very harmful and it isn't acceptable by this you took the liberty from your people of freedom and this is also considered as violation of civil liberties.

1. Should individuals be financially compensated when they register to be organ donors?

Yes, any person who agrees to donate the organs must be financially compensated. As we all know people donate the organs for good cause and if they register themselves for donating the organs, they should be appreciated by giving the financial assistance. This will not only encourage the donors but also the common people to do something good for a greater cause.

2. Are students becoming too dependent on technology? Should computers, tablets, and cell phones be banned from the classroom?

It is true that students are becoming more dependent on technology than before. But it is also true that the technology has its own benefit let's suppose someone is getting education in IT institution then the requirement of computers or gadgets like that is must. But yes, it should be regularized and should be provided where it's necessary. So, the gadgets like Computer should not be banned but should be provided where they're required.

3. Over half of American marriages end in divorce. Should mainstream media change the way that it depicts the traditional family unit, to incorporate divorce and second marriages?

Yes, with no doubt media plays an important role in our lives. They're also known as opinion makers and media is very influential to people. If they spread the message that to corporate with each other or to reconcile when the things aren't normal it will greatly affect the ratio of divorce. Because in divorce children are the real victims, they're the ones who greatly suffer from this trauma and live with it for the rest of their lives.
